10 Fun Alternatives to Halloween Candy

By Tammy Davenport, About.com

Halloween will be here before you know it and we all know that Halloween, to most children, means candy. My kids have already started talking about how much "loot" they will be getting this year. To help keep cavities away and maintain your child's good dental health this Halloween, remember to have him brush and floss after eating sugary treats.

Too Much Candy

If you are concerned about the amount of candy that your children will receive, try rationing it out over a few weeks. For example, you can pack a couple of pieces in their sack lunches or give them a few pieces after school every day or every other day. You can also have each child set aside half of their Halloween candy, and later accompany them to donate it to an organization such as a battered women's shelter or a child abuse center.

Alternatives to Candy

Instead of giving out Halloween candy this year, check out these 10 fun alternatives to give out on Halloween night:

- Sugar free gum
 - Vampire teeth
 - Halloween stickers
 - Party favor sunglasses
 - Small cans of playdoh
 - Noisemakers
 - Pencils with Halloween erasers
 - Halloween bouncy balls
 - Temporary tattoos
 - Small bottles of bubbles
- Most kids love this stuff and it won't cause decay!

Good Oral Health

No matter what you decide to give out this Halloween, remember to follow these tips to help protect your children's teeth from cavities and maintain good oral health throughout the year: Brush twice a day with a toothpaste containing fluoride. Floss daily; dental flossers work great. Eat healthy foods and nutritious snacks. Visit the dentist for regular check ups.

Halloween: Evolution of a Holiday

As European immigrants came to America, they brought their varied Halloween customs with them. Because of the rigid Protestant belief systems that characterized early New England, celebration of Halloween in colonial times was extremely limited there.

It was much more common in Maryland and the southern colonies. As the beliefs and customs of different European ethnic groups, as well as the American Indians, meshed, a distinctly American version of Halloween began to emerge. The first celebrations included “play parties,” public events held to celebrate the harvest, where neighbors would share stories of the dead, tell each other’s fortunes, dance, and sing. Colonial Halloween festivities also featured the telling of ghost stories and mischief-making of all kinds. By the middle of the nineteenth century, annual autumn festivities were common, but Halloween was not yet celebrated everywhere in the country.

In the second half of the nineteenth century, America was flooded with new immigrants. These new immigrants, especially the millions of Irish fleeing Ireland’s potato famine of 1846, helped to popularize the celebration of Halloween nationally. Taking from Irish and English traditions, Americans began to dress up in costumes and go house to house asking for food or money, a practice that eventually became today’s “trick-or-treat” tradition. Young women believed that, on Halloween, they could divine the name or appearance of their future husband by doing tricks with yarn, apple parings, or mirrors.

In the late 1800s, there was a move in America to mold Halloween into a holiday more about community and neighborly get togethers, than about ghosts, pranks, and witchcraft.

At the turn of the century, Halloween parties for both children and adults became the most common way to celebrate the day. Parties focused on games, foods of the season, and festive costumes. Parents were encouraged by newspapers and community leaders to take anything “frightening” or “grotesque” out of Halloween celebrations. Because of their efforts, Halloween lost most of its superstitious and religious overtones by the beginning of the twentieth century.

By the 1920s and 1930s, Halloween had become a secular, but community-centered holiday, with parades and town-wide parties as the featured entertainment. Despite the best efforts of many schools and communities, vandalism began to plague Halloween celebrations in many communities during this time. By the 1950s, town leaders had successfully limited vandalism and Halloween had evolved into a holiday directed mainly at the young. Due to the high numbers of young children during the fifties baby boom, parties moved from town civic centers into the classroom or home, where they could be more easily accommodated. Between 1920 and 1950, the centuries-old practice of trick-or-treating was also revived. Trick-or-treating was a relatively inexpensive way for an entire community to share the Halloween celebration. In theory, families could also prevent tricks being played on them by providing the neighborhood children with small treats. A new American tradition was born, and it has continued to grow. Today, Americans spend an estimated $6.9 billion annually on Halloween, making it the country’s second largest commercial holiday.

Halloween Candy Safety

Of course, you want to make sure that the candy your kids do eat is safe, and that means inspecting everything he brings home before they even gets a chance to eat any of it.

To make sure your child’s Halloween candy is safe, be sure that you:

- * Check the ingredients if your child has any food allergies
- * Look for choking hazards, including hard candy and chewing gum, if you have younger children
- * Throw out unwrapped treats or anything that looks like it may have been opened or tampered with.
